An electrochemical biosensor for the determination of ochratoxin A based on a multifunctional nanocomposite constructed by chitosan and gold nanoparticles modified with cytochrome c. The development of novel electrochemical biosensors is a subject of great interest for food analysis and medical diagnosis. We report a novel electrochemical biosensor for the detection of ochratoxin A (OTA) based on a multifunctional nanocomposite, which was obtained by the adsorption of cytochrome c (Cyt c) on gold nanoparticles (Au NPs) and chitosan (CS), as well as its integration with an electrochemical immunoassay for the determination of OTA. After the formation of the composite, a novel electrochemical sensing strategy was introduced for the determination of OTA. In this strategy, by using the Fenton-like reaction of H<sub>2</sub>O<sub>2</sub> as an oxidant, OTA-BSA (bovine serum albumin) was oxidized to a metabolically inactive state. The reductive recovery of the electrode was induced by the addition of nicotinamide adenine dinucleotide (NADH) which was enzymatically oxidized to NAD(+) and reduced to the downstream enzymes, Cyt c. Cyt c could be reduced by NADH as the electron acceptor and reduced OTA that contributed to OTA-BSA electrochemical regeneration. When the composite was immobilized onto a glassy carbon electrode, the resulting biosensor, based on the above sensing strategy, was sensitive and specific for the determination of OTA at a low detection limit of 0.60 ng mL<sup>-1</sup> with a wide linear range of 0-200 ng mL<sup>-1</sup>, and the detection limit for OTA was achieved lower than that of previously reported electrochemical immunoassay based on the same sensing strategy. The linear response of the biosensor was attributed to the catalytic effect of Cyt c on the Fenton-like oxidation of OTA-BSA, the subsequent
