HyperMotion Technology will take the general rules of football and improve them to match the agility and fluidity of today's top players. We've captured players moving in real time during a real-life, high-intensity competitive match, so we can use the motion-capture data to better simulate the on-ball movements of players. This new technology also makes the pitch feel more responsive. Players sprinting from one side to the other and retreating while they do it will seem more spontaneous and naturally flowing than ever before. Check out more details on HyperMotion Technology below. Smooth Movement The level of agility and fluidity in motion will be tuned by allowing the movement of players to be influenced by their on-ball movements. What this means for you: Players will retain their running style and individual preferences as they accelerate around the pitch. Dynamic Impact Zones The ball needs to pass through its zones in order to win challenges and score goals. Check out the example below: To expand the width of these impact zones, they have been increased in width by 30% (compared to last year). This should make goal-scoring easier, which is especially important in defensive transition. Creating a Level Playing Field The dimensions of the pitch have also been enlarged. The width and length are now 1,500 meters (instead of 1,300 meters) and two meters (as opposed to 1,550 meters). This should create a better balance between large and small teams, even when using the expanded pitch. Check out the example below: Players will keep their individual preferences for how fast they want the ball to move by using a new 'Hybrid Trajectory.' What this means for you: Players will retain their own preferred speed of ball movement. Personal Playstyle Team tactics are designed to be flexible. You can tactically set up a team to defend for example, whilst still allowing individual players to express themselves and play their own style. What this means for you: Through your unique personal style and 'playstyle,' your team will function as you want it to. Personal Playstyle Your 'playstyle' is the way that you play your football. A 'playstyle' can be anything from
