I'm developing a game right now using a txt-file for my dictionary. The thing is that I can't figure out how to read the file. When I try to use this code: string file = Application.StartupPath +

"\\dict.txt"; string contents = System.IO.File.ReadAllText(file); I get an exception that says it can't find that file. Does anybody have a clue about how to read this file? Thanks in advance. A: You can use string contents = File.ReadAllText(file); but I would suggest moving your dictionary to your executable (into the Resources or into the App.Config) and then pass a String[] when calling your method that gets the String[] of your dictionary. It will be so easy then to use. INTRODUCTION

============= Dermatitis artefacta syndrome (DAS) is a term used to describe a psychodermatology disorder in which a person deliberately induces lesions on the skin. Individuals with DAS present with new cutaneous lesions usually above the waist and typically develop within a few days of injection. There are other rare types of dermatitis such as flame retardant dermatitis (FRD) characterized by a transient maculopapular rash in areas exposed to flame retardants \[[@b1-apem-2018-23-2-57]\]. DAS and FRD can also occur in tandem. We present a case of FRD with chest involvement, without skin lesions on the lower extremities, in a 16-year-old girl.

CASE REPORT ============ A

16-year-old girl presented with intermittent itchy skin lesions for 2 months. The lesions began on the chest, gradually spread to the lower abdomen, and slowly disappeared. Two weeks prior to presentation, new pruritic erythematous and maculopapular rash with brown pigmentation at the lower extremities was noted (Fig. 1{ref-type="fig"}). The symptoms were worse at night, associated with chills and mild fever. No history of trauma was reported. After 1 week, the skin lesions on the chest began to fade. During outpatient follow-up, the development of more brown maculopapules in the lower extremities and a butterfly-like lesion in the buttocks were noted. A skin biopsy was performed with a diagnosis of contact dermatitis. The patient has had no psychiatric history and there was no family history of skin disease or psychiatric disorder. Dermatologists were consulted, but the diagnosis of FRD was not considered. The family was advised to apply a topical steroid ointment and to avoid contact with the product. However, 2 weeks later, the lesions on the buttocks and lower extremities did not improve. Then, the patient was hospitalized and a blood test showed a normal leukocyte count (white blood cells, 5,300/µL; segmented neutrophils, 60.9%; lymphocytes, 31.7%; monocytes, 3.4%) and a normal platelet count (platelets, 119,000/µL). A blood culture was negative. The patient was diagnosed
